Many thanks in advance A: You could split each line at the separator and then extract the portion to the left of the hyphen: In [8]: df['phones'] = [re.sub(r'\d{3}-[\d]{3}-[\d]{4}', lambda s: s.group(0), x) for x in df['phones']] df Out[8]:

Wed, 05 Sep 2016 14:36:12 +0000Expanding an elite archival network: the California State Chemical Laboratories (CALBCD). Substantial efforts have been made to identify and establish multiple archival repositories for chemical agents used in the United States during the twentieth century. These government-sponsored facilities host several chemical agents, including nerve agents, mustard gas (chemical warfare agent), phosgene (chemical warfare agent), and nerve gas components (chemical warfare agent). As chemical agents have become more widely used and debated, other archival facilities have emerged to host archival materials. These stockpiled materials can be licensed to faculty and graduate students for research or classroom work and are collectively referred to as "access collection." As CALBCD works to meet the varied needs of chemists, this includes distribution of access collections. This approach has yielded enormous benefits, yet it also carries the risk of simultaneous distribution of duplicate or inadequate collections. To develop a sound strategy for expanding CALBCD's access collection, it is necessary to evaluate CALBCD's collections first. Items may not fit cleanly into a category, and the absence of any collection means that such items do not, at least at this time, have a CALBCD archival repository. Eventually, as collections emerge over time, it should be possible to ensure collections are consolidated and co-located where possible. Furthermore, to maximize the value of CALBCD's access collections, work with CALBCD's existing contacts and rebuild CALBCD's contacts list should begin now.The present invention relates to a new and improved construction of a

Crack: Main menu Post navigation On the Edge Back in 1984, it seemed like the only way to be part of popular culture was to be on Broadway. With the National Theatre on 42nd Street, it seemed like the only way to make money was to write. With the fresh wave of creativity coming from Chicago, it seemed like the only way to stay in the game was to do what you had to do to get on. Tina Fey and Steve Martin, you were my idols. You were the first true agents of contemporary entertainment. Now, I find myself on my own edge. The power of popular media is almost simultaneously uncontrollable and unimaginable. Just as we shouldn't be surprised that a rock singer manages to break a record, the irony that in the age of streaming content we are now watching things that were, at one point in time, only seen on TV, seems like a natural law. Yesterday, I downloaded a copy of the textbook I'll be using in my upcoming studies at NYU. Turns out, there is a possibility that you
