From the menu bar, select the Adjustment tool to access your Adjustments panel. Click on the Bright and Contrast tab and select a color using the eyedropper tool. The eyedropper tool is available from the toolbox, which is available on the top of the window. One of the major reasons for using an eyedropper is that you can snap your cursor over any color and it will automatically update the currently selected layer to that color. This is an extremely powerful tool, and it's available from the Shapes panel. While not as powerful as the eyedropper tool, the Color Picker is also a great tool. It gives you the ability to select a color on a page on a website. For example, you can find colors on a website, and make sure the color you want is compatible with what you already have. It can also be used to compare colors within a document. Not only has Photoshop offered the eyedropper tool, but it has also created an entire section where you can access a variety of tools that are related to selecting a color or colorizing a picture and lighting it. It's located at the bottom left corner of the screen under the Brush Tool. Selecting and lighting is essential to create professional looking graphics. The Selecting and Lighting (Color/Visualize) tools allow you to select different color in the image you are trying to modify, or you can use the Luminance and Color tool for common editing tasks. First, select the tool you'd like to use; then select the area of the image where you'd like to edit and apply your changes (How to Select an Area).
